Youth Music Initiative Reaches Every Primary School in Highland

This year, delivery of the traditional music aspect of the Youth Music Initiative (YMI) in the Highlands, which gives children in all Highland primary schools experience of traditional music, has reached its set target. Not only has YMI reached every primary school in the Highland Council area, it has also led to the creation of employment for the many talented and professional traditional musicians.

In 2004, the responsibility for delivering the traditional aspect of YMI was given to Fèisean nan Gàidheal by the Highland Council. This followed a pledge by the Scottish Executive which aimed to ‘ensure that by 2006, every primary school pupil should have access to at least one year’s free music tuition by the time they reach Primary 6’. Co-ordination of programming the initiative was then passed onto local fèisean in the Highland Council area, with every school from Eigg to Avoch and Wick to Glencoe experiencing traditional music from some of the most experienced and acknowledged artists in their profession, some of whom are graduates from the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama. Tuition has also been offered through the medium of Gaelic in Gaelic schools, using tutors fluent in the language.

After running for three years, the goal of delivering a high quality traditional musical experience through the initiative to all 184 primary schools in the Highland area has been achieved.

Music Development Officer for the Highland Council, Norman Bolton hopes that this initiative will help pupils further on in their learning, saying “It is hoped that through time all these skills will enable pupils to build a high level of musical understanding as they move into Secondary education’.

Working on behalf of Fèisean nan Gàidheal, Rae MacEachern is the YMI Co-ordinator. She added “It’s thanks to the schools for taking this on and making this work into their own tight curriculum that has made the delivery of YMI such a success. Added to that, the quality of delivery through the outstanding tutors and local fèisean has been remarkable, and long may it continue’.

The traditional music programme of the Youth Music Initiative covers all primary schools in the Highland Council area. Each school is given a 12-week programme broken into three 4-week blocks and with their choices being taken from the menu of options. In order not to duplicate or interfere with existing music provision in schools, the options offered are in four main areas; tin whistle, Gaelic song, children’s song and group music. Musicians and artists involved in the initiative have included such talents as Rachel Walker, Deirdre Graham, Louise MacKenzie and Bob Massie.

Amazingly, all the pupils were really enthusiastic about the lessons and really enjoyed them. Hope to have the same again.

Teacher, Brora Primary School

I liked it very much. I was not into this kind of music but I am now!

In Focus: Delivering YMI in North Highland and The Small Isles

The universal delivery of YMI effectively covers a large geographical region, equivalent to the size of Belgium. Here, we focus on the approach of two different areas in delivering YMI to schools in their locality.

North Highland
Covering both rural and urban areas, Féis Rois co-ordinates the delivery of YMI in 104 schools in the Highlands. Since September 2006, over 3,700 children have received visits from their team of tutors. The Education Officer at Féis Rois has organised a system whereby the focus rotates between the areas of Inverness/Nairn and Ross-shire/Caithness. The children are given a carefully-planned, lively and informative tuition programme of traditional Scottish music through a range of subject choices.

Teaching staff and children have responded with wonderful enthusiasm and great progress is being made in the subjects offered. Particularly noteworthy is the all-inclusive nature of the scheme, which allows children of all abilities to benefit from the tuition.

The YMI programme has made a notable impact on the career paths of many graduates and Highland musicians. Three of our original YMI tutors have now gone on to become Primary teachers, and others have been able to make a full-time professional commitment to music.

I liked the songs and now I’ve got more confidence in myself and enjoy singing out loud.

The Small Isles
Féis Lochabair have been busy delivering their YMI programme to some of the remotest places in Scotland. The isles of Eigg, Muck, Rum and Canna all lie off the North West Coast of Scotland, where pupil numbers vary from one pupil on the Isle of Canna, to six children on the Isle of Muck. This may be rather low compared to some of the bigger schools found in the more populated areas of the Highlands, but that doesn’t mean they get left out.

Delivery of YMI takes a different form in this area. Usually, the tutors will be based on the mainland in Mallaig and travel out to each of the Islands every day. Unlike the mainland schools, where tutors will come in for perhaps an hour every week for a set period, the small isles get just one visit per term, which normally lasts around three hours. By CalMac ferry or by Fastcraft Rib, tutors of the YMI traditional music programme make every effort to get to the schools in the islands to deliver YMI.

Tutor Training: Meeting the Needs of the Tutors

The success of YMI has opened up further opportunities for tutors to gain training specific to working in schools. Units have included class management and teaching strategies, preparation of teaching plans, along with child protection, equal opportunities and inclusion. Basic Gaelic for classroom use is also an essential ongoing class.

Throughout the year, training days are centrally organised and regularly take place in different areas throughout the region. Outside agencies have also been included in delivering training aimed at tutors involved in bringing the arts to children.

These training events are complemented by tutor training sessions run by Fèisean nan Gàidheal. These two-level courses, covering all aspects of tutoring young people, have been well received by those who attended, including representatives from Edinburgh Youth Gaitherin’ and Glasgow Fiddle Workshop, as well as aspiring fèis tutors.

YMI and Highland 2007

In the year that Scotland celebrates Highland Culture, the Fèisean have been asked to offer their services to the many Cultural Co-ordinators in the Highland area. If you are running an event in association with one of the co-ordinators in the area and think that the project would benefit from one of YMI’s many talented and experienced tutors, then do not hesitate to get in touch. Your local YMI representative’s contact details can be found on page 4 of this leaflet.
Each school is provided with feedback forms for teachers, pupils and tutors to complete at the end of each block of YMI. This initiative has led to many positive comments and responses appearing from schools across the area. Below are typical examples of the comments the project has received:

_We really enjoy the input from YMI, and the pupils look forward to their visits. A number of our more musical pupils continue to play whistle from home and enjoy a new challenge._

Head Teacher, Elgol Primary School

_Great class. Could do with more singing to boost confidence. Music good._

Tutor

_The children gained so much from the four weeks. They thoroughly enjoyed the interaction and participation. It also gave me, as a teacher, an insight into a side of the children we don’t normally see. I thought it was extremely worthwhile and thoroughly rewarding for the school._

Teacher, Mulbuie Primary School

_I really enjoyed tin whistle and I am going to try and get to the Fèis School Pupil_ _liked the songs so much that when I went home I was singing the songs all the time._

School Pupil

_This was a most worthwhile project. I likes the way the pupils’ individual interests were included._

Teacher, Rogart Primary School

_It was fun and it made me like Scottish music more._

School Pupil

_More of the same! As a Gaelic-medium teacher I particularly appreciate it when tutors use some Gaelic with the pupils. I felt that the groupwork classes were very well organised. There was a good balance of work on developing knowledge about Scottish music and developing playing skills in an inclusive way that catered for all abilities. Having gained new ideas for teaching group music I will try to do more myself with the pupils. Thank you Louise and Barry!_Teacher, Ullapool Primary School
